

ABSTRACT

A method for forming an LED includes bonding a heat generating region of a light emitting device to a heat conductive substrate, so as to define a composite structure and so as to substantially enhance the heat dissipation. Enhancing heat dissipation from the device facilitates operation at higher currents, so as to provide greater light output therefrom.